Karen Green: Bough Down by Karen Green, Hardcover | Barnes ...

One of the most singular books I read this year—a book that left an indelible impression on me—is Karen Green's Bough Down, a lyric elegy for a husband who took his own life. Comprising both visual collages and elliptical prose entries, Bough Down is a lament for a lost love, by turns yearning, acerbic, resigned, and alive with protest.

Lost and Found: A Conversation with Karen Green - ARTnews.com

A book of dualities, probing the small spaces between lucidity and madness, desire and ambivalence, the living and the absent. Both an evocation of her love for her husband David Foster Wallace and an act of defiance in the face of devastating loss, Bough Down is a lapidary, keenly observed and composed work,

On the other hand, Green's loss—her role as wife, her identity as partner and companion—is her own. Bough Down is not only her autopsy of the why of his death (a fruitless gesture, perhaps, but one endemic to mourning), but also her inquiry into who she is now without him. • • • “Why do we blush before death?” Carson reflects.
